RESEARCHERS AND THEIR ‘SUBJECTS’
This book is dedicated to all those who take part in research
RESEARCHERS AND THEIR ‘SUBJECTS’
Ethics, power, knowledge and consent
Edited by Marie Smyth and Emma Williamson
Contents

Notes on contributors vi
Introduction 1
Emma Williamson and Marie Smyth

Part One: Participation and inclusion

one Ethical considerations in service-user-led research: Strategies for Living Project Sarah Wright, Rachel Waters, Vicky Nicholls and members of the Strategies for Living Project 19

two Making the decision about enrolment in a randomised controlled trial Tracey J. Stone 35

three Ethical protection in research: including children in the debate Trudy Goodenough, Emma Williamson, Julie Kent and Richard Ashcroft 55

four ‘An equal relationship’?: people with learning difficulties getting involved in research
Beth Tarleton, Val Williams, Neil Palmer and Stacey Gramlich 73

Part Two: The review and governance process

five Research with psychiatric patients: knowing their own minds?
Sarah Nelson 91

six Researching end of life in old age: ethical challenges
Ailsa Cameron, Liz Lloyd, Naomi Kent and Pat Anderson 105

Part Three: Researchers’ relationships with participants

seven Interviewing: the unspoken compact Jean Rafferty 121

eight Using participative action research with war-affected populations:
lessons from research in Northern Ireland and South Africa
Marie Smyth 137

nine Conducting longitudinal epidemiological research in children
John Henderson 157

ten Speaking truth to power: experiencing critical research Phil Scraton 175

eleven Domestic violence and research ethics
The Domestic Violence Research Group (DVRG), University of Bristol 195

Conclusion
Marie Smyth and Emma Williamson 211

Index 217
Notes on contributors

Hilary Abrahams is a Research Associate in the Domestic Violence Research Group, University of Bristol. She is currently working on an evaluation of supported housing for vulnerable groups of people, including women escaping domestic violence, for the Safer Communities Supported Housing Fund.

Pat Anderson works for the NHS as a Patient Involvement Facilitator, project managing the National Patient Surveys. Prior to this Pat worked as a Research Associate in the School for Policy Studies at the University of Bristol. Her research interests include parenting, the role of the family in society and the PPI agenda.

Richard Ashcroft is Leverhulme Senior Lecturer in Medical Ethics and Head of the Medical Ethics Unit at Imperial College London. A philosopher by training, he has published widely in medical ethics and the ethics of medical research in particular.

Ailsa Cameron is a Research Fellow in the Centre for Health and Social Care, at the School for Policy Studies, University of Bristol. Her main areas of research interest are changing professional roles and joint working between health and social care agencies. Ailsa is also a member of an NHS research ethics committee.

Trudy Goodenough is a Research Associate in the Centre for Ethics in Medicine, University of Bristol, and worked on the Ethical Protection in Epidemiology Genetics (EPEG) Project from 2001-03. She currently organises the Centre's programme of training for ethics committee members. Trudy is a qualified nurse and midwife, and has a PhD in developmental psychology.

Stacey Gramlich is a Researcher who worked from 1999-2002 on the Swindon People First Project about direct payments. Swindon People First is an organisation run by people with learning difficulties, and all the researchers were people with learning difficulties. Stacey, along with Swindon People First colleagues, has published on a range of issues relating to the experiences of people with learning difficulties.

Gill Hague, Senior Research Fellow, is Co-Founder and current Director of the Domestic Violence Research Group (to be relaunched September 2004 as the Violence Against Women Research Group), School for Policy Studies, University of Bristol.
John Henderson is a Senior Lecturer at the University of Bristol and a Consultant Paediatrician in Paediatric Respiratory Disease at Bristol Royal Hospital for Children. He qualified at the University of Manchester in 1981 and trained in Paediatrics and Paediatric Respiratory Medicine in Manchester, London, Bristol and Perth, Western Australia. His research interests include the epidemiology of respiratory disorders in children, particularly in early life exposures and the development of asthma.

Julie Kent is Reader in Sociology in the Faculty of Economics and Social Science at the University of the West of England. In addition to work on the Ethical Protection in Epidemiology Genetics (EPEG) Project described in Chapter Three, her current research is focused on issues relating to the innovation and regulation of human implant technologies and tissue-engineered medical products. She has also published work on participatory research methods, the sociology of childbirth and reproduction, and women in social research.

Naomi Kent works at the Care Network in Bath and North East Somerset where she is the coordinator of the Carers Together consultation programme. Previously she was a Research Fellow at the School for Policy Studies, University of Bristol, working on the Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC)-funded pilot project looking at ‘Significant Life Events in Old Age’, researching the relationship between ageing and dying.

Liz Lloyd is a Lecturer in Community Care in the School for Policy Studies at the University of Bristol. A gerontologist, she has particular interest in the study of ageing, care and dependency and related ethical and political dilemmas. Liz’s recent research has been primarily focused on end of life care in old age.

Melanie McCarry is Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) Post-Doctoral Research Fellow in the area of male violence, young people and gender constructions (masculinity) in the Domestic Violence Research Group at the School for Policy Studies, University of Bristol.

Ellen Malos is a Senior Research Fellow in the University of Bristol. She has along history of activism in the women’s movement and Women’s Aid. She was a founder member, with Gill Hague, of the Domestic Violence Research Group within the School for Policy Studies in the University of Bristol.

Sarah Nelson is a writer and a Research Fellow in Sociology at the University of Edinburgh. She was formerly a social work journalist. She is author of Incest: Fact and myth (Stramullion, 1982/87) and has published widely on topics relating to child sexual abuse, including investigative interviewing of children, physical and psychological effects of childhood sexual abuse, community prevention of childhood sexual abuse, organised abuse and feminist approaches to abuse issues.
Vicky Nicholls is the UK Project Coordinator for the Strategies for Living Project. At the time of writing she was responsible for overseeing the Project and managing the team. Vicky had previously worked as Research Support Worker in the first phase of Strategies for Living, and prior to that in a range of voluntary sector organisations including the Greater London Association of Community Health Councils and South East Mind.

Neil Palmer is a Researcher who has worked on a number of projects developed by the Bristol Self-Advocacy Research Group. Neil has been involved in a number of projects looking at disability and discrimination. With other members of the Bristol Group, he gained a diploma from the Open University for his work on the project he describes in the current book.

Jean Rafferty has been a freelance writer for over 20 years and is the author of two books on sport. She is currently holder of a journalist’s fellowship from the Joseph Rowntree Foundation to write Disposable women, a book on prostitution. She was shortlisted for Feature Writer of the Year in the 1997 British Press Awards for her work on ritual abuse and rape. In 1999 she won the National Daily category in the Travelex Travel Writing Awards for her ‘inspired piece’ on Buenos Aires. She has travelled widely for her journalism and has taught on various journalism workshops in developing countries as well as on Strathclyde University’s postgraduate course in journalism studies.

Tais Silva was formerly a health psychologist in Brazil working with women survivors of sexual and domestic violence. She was also the coordinator of the first refuge for women survivors of domestic violence in Brazil. She has a Masters in Women’s Studies from Lancaster University (1998–99) and has worked for the national and local health departments of Brazil, as a consultant on issues affecting women survivors of violence. Tais is currently studying for a PhD in the School for Policy Studies, at the University of Bristol. Her thesis is entitled ‘The medicalisation of violence against women: tracing medical and psychological discourses on sexual and domestic violence in Brazil’.

Phil Scraton is Professor of Criminology in the Institute of Criminology and Criminal Justice, School of Law, Queen’s University, Belfast. Until recently he was Professor and Director of the Centre for Studies in Crime and Social Justice at Edge Hill University College. His primary research includes the regulation and criminalisation of children and young people; controversial deaths and the state; the rights of the bereaved and survivors in the aftermath of disasters; the politics of truth and official inquiry; and critical analysis and its application.

Marie Smyth is Head of Research and Communication for Criminal Justice Inspection Northern Ireland and Chair of Research Ethics Committee 1 for Northern Ireland. She was Jennings Randolph Senior Fellow (2002-03) in the United States Institute of Peace in Washington DC and founder of the Institute for Conflict Research (Belfast). She was on the academic staff of the University of Ulster for 20 years.

Tracey J. Stone was a Research Assistant and postgraduate student in the Centre for Ethics in Medicine, University of Bristol, from 1999 until 2004. During this time she was also seconded as a Research and Development Officer for the United Bristol’s Health Trust. Tracey’s PhD thesis examined the ethics of recruitment onto clinical trials and was awarded in 2004. She has published in this area and in relation to research governance and research ethics committees.

Beth Tarleton is a Research Fellow in the Norah Fry Research Centre, University of Bristol. Her interests include user consultation and involvement, the development of accessible information, the provision of services for disabled children and their families and services for individuals with autistic spectrum disorders. Beth joined the Norah Fry Research Centre in 1998 after completing her MPhil which looked at teachers’ beliefs regarding children’s special educational needs. Beth is a qualified primary school teacher and has been involved in supporting groups/activities for disabled children and adults for many years.

Rachel Waters worked for the Strategies for Living Project at the time of writing. She was the Research Training and Support Worker for the Project in Wales, supporting Wales-based projects. Rachel had previously worked as a drop-in centre worker at Newport Mind.

Val Williams is a Research Fellow who joined the Norah Fry Research Centre, University of Bristol, in January 1997. Her current research interests include discursive analysis of interaction, inclusive research and supporting people with learning difficulties to take a full role in the research process. She is also involved in communicating about research in accessible ways, and is especially keen to support the authorship of people with learning difficulties themselves. Val’s previous careers were in support services in further and adult education, and in teaching.

Emma Williamson is a Research Fellow in the Centre for Ethics in Medicine, University of Bristol. Her doctoral thesis examined domestic violence and the response of the medical profession (1994–98, University of Derby). She has worked at the University of Bristol since 1998.

Sarah Wright was the Research Training and Support Worker for the Strategies for Living Project in England, supporting England–based projects. Sarah had previously worked in both research and administration roles and continues to work with the GOLD (Growing Older with Learning Disabilities) group, who focus on using drama as a form of self-advocacy.